Monica Corbitt Rivers is a Licensed Psychologist and executive coach with over ten years of experience providing leadership assessment, facilitation, evaluation, and organizational consultation services. With a deep understanding of systems, group dynamics, and individual differences, Monica uses a strengths-based approach to help leaders and organizational units navigate change, improve team dynamics and effectiveness, and enhance climate and culture. Monica's coaching clients have ranged from newly appointed leaders to seasoned, senior level executives from diverse sectors, with expertise in higher education, research, government, healthcare, and telecommunications/media.

Prior to establishing her executive coaching and consulting practice, Monica gained invaluable professional experience while working in higher education and public sector settings. Monica held leadership positions at Duke University and N.C. State University and served on the faculty of Winston Salem State University. Monica also taught graduate leadership courses on topics such as change management and personality and leadership at Wake Forest University and currently serves on the Advisory Council of Leadership Education at Duke Divinity.

Monica earned a Ph.D. from Vanderbilt University and completed an internship in professional psychology at Duke University's Counseling and Psychological Services. She serves as an adjunct executive coach and coaching subject matter expert at the Center for Creative Leadership (CCL), a global provider of leadership and executive education, and holds the Board Certified Coach (BCC) coach credential from the Center for Credentialing and Education.
